Risk Engineering

In the dynamic, highly competitive world of modern business, where 'just in time' production is now commonplace, risks threatening significant financial loss and possible business failure are becoming ever more prevalent.

Our purpose at Tokio Marine Kiln is to help our customers protect themselves against losses and the resulting business interruption and reduce their exposure through the identification of hazards, assessment of risk and development of practical, cost effective solutions.

Services provided

To help reduce or remove potential risks our risk engineering team provides a range of services which are combined to create tailor-made loss prevention programmes for individual clients. These services include:

- Risk engineering surveys and associated reports with on-going support in relation to recommendations
- Guidance with respect to the loss prevention aspects of major expansion projects
- Training seminars
- Customer checklists, permits and information leaflets
- Guidance in relation to managing the process of isolating fire protection systems for maintenance etc. and ensuring that these systems are reinstated once work has finished

Why choose Tokio Marine Kiln?

- Following implementation of the proposed solutions, the frequency and severity of possible exposures can be controlled, reduced or even eliminated
- We have a highly qualified team of risk engineers distributed across Europe, with expertise in a wide variety of industries. They are knowledgeable on local standards and can provide a rapid response to customer queries and requests
- Our in-house team of engineers also ensures that clients are provided with a consistent level of service in line with a common philosophy, wherever their facility is located. Close links between our engineering and underwriting teams enhance communication and understanding of key factors affecting risk quality, thereby ensuring our clients' risks are secured and protected
